In Cooperation with Rep. Bruce Braley (D-IA) and Rep. Lee Terry (R-NE), Invites

You to a Briefing

With the adoption of the 15-year Renewable Fuel Standard (RFS) to provide market access for competitors of the oil industry, Congress set the country on a course to diversify our transportation fuel supply with cheaper, renewable, lower carbon fuels. It is only by getting off oil that the country can break the link between the price that Americans pay at the pump and the global oil market. Since 2000, the RFS has helped reduce foreign oil imports by 25% and is saving Americans $1 a gallon at the pump. Yet, opponents of the RFS continue their efforts to undermine the statute and block consumer choice. The United States cannot afford to go backwards. As the House embarks on further consideration of FY 2015 appropriations bills and the EPA revises its proposed 2014 Renewable Volume Obligations (RVO), it is even more critical that you know the facts.
